BREED THEATER.

"The Man Without a Country," Thrill-ing Patriotic Picture.

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead who never to himself hath said: This is my own my native land."
Scott's immortal lines are said to have inspired Edward Everett Hele when he wrote the celebrated novel, "The Man Without a Country," and no one can wirness the wonderful picture by the same name now being shown at the Breed theater, without his patriotism Breed theater, withoue his patriotism being strengthened and his heart beating just a little faster, as seene after scene of startlingly real episodes, follow in rapid succession. This story is most familiar to every school child from coast to coast, and at the performance of yesterday, countless children thronged the theater, and after the wonderful scene depicting the deck of an old frigade during a battle at sea, during which the Stars and Stripes are shot from the mast head sea, during which the Stars and Stripes are shot from the mast head by a bursting shell, followed by a treadous piece of acting when the man without a country grasps the colors, and madly rushes up the mast, and nails the old flag to the mast head, their enthusiasm knew no bounds, and the building re-echoed from the long-continued applause. To cap the climax, Master Harry Noonan, the children's favorite, sings the new milliary song, immediately after this great picture, and one can hardly hear the words of the little artists as each new scene. the little artist, as each new scene shows the national colors in a more inspiring form than the previous one. Little Master Noonan has charged the audiences by his artistically rendered solos, he very gracefully responding to his very numerous recalls.

The William Josh Daly minstrels have two more days to appear, outside of the free Sunday concert and the next suitable night there will, beyond next suitable night there will, beyond question, be a crowd to listen to their melodious songs and to laugh at their bright jokes and repartee. Je Nelson, Al. Berger, Jack Welch and William Oswald have made plenty of friends hereabouts and so likewise have Stewart and Brown in their dancing act. Ed. Euster in his hand balancing, the Three of Us in their songs and nonsense, and the Mozart Trio in their trombone and cornet and mandolin and banjo numbers, not to mention the concert chimes with which the Mozarts bring their part of the program to an end.

The pavilion has its full quota of dancers every afternoon and evening: the orchestra is furnishing the kind of strains that dancers like and the tripping of the "light fantastic toe" keeps merrily on until 11 o'clock. The Sunday concert, when you can sit in a nice reserved chair and not pay a copper for it, will start at 3.20. Take the 2.45 car from the square,

Greater Cleanliness Needed.

There is need of reformation in some of the city markets and groceries. Provisions should be protected so far as possible from contamination. There is no need of hanging meat and poultry where dirt from the streets will be deposited upon it, and wire covers will exclude flies from cheese. In many meat stores cuts at kept, presumably for catching rats and mice. No objection can be urged against this; but cats which prowil around back afleys and garbage cans should not be permitted to walk over the food supplies. When you and I were young, Maggie, and speening round the place, I never blew a choking cloud of pipe smoke in your face,
I didn't puff my stogies where your ma's lace curtains swung—
I hope I had more sense than that when you and I were young.
